

Industry News

Data-protection course deemed "highly relevant"

Connecting for Health (CfH) has rated an information-governance course "highly relevant" to all those working in data protection and confidentiality within healthcare and social care, in a recent review.

The training course, the ISEB Certificate in Data Protection, designed by specialist training provider QT&C Ltd, was praised as "almost a prerequisite for all those responsible for data protection" in the document, which can be downloaded from the CfH website.

The course is expected to be recommended as a suitable standard qualification for information-governance professionals and others with data protection responsibilities within the NHS.

"We have established a considerable knowledge of information governance within the NHS and are very pleased that our course in particular has been acknowledged as highly relevant to its needs", says Nathan Fowler, Business Development Manager at the Bedfordshire-based QT&C.

The qualification can also be undertaken with a number of other companies, which are listed on the British Computer Society website at www.bcs.org

Source: bjhc&im November 2006

For further information please contact QT&C Ltd on 01234 436 085